Opening Remarks

- 8:15 Mark Squillace, Director, Natural Resources Law Center
David Phillips, Rocky Mountain Mineral Law Foundation

Session 1 - Reflections on Natural Resource Law and Policy

8:30 The Historical Evolution of Natural Resource Law and Policy

Moderator: Sarah Van de Wetering, University of Montana
Sally Fairfax, UC-Berkley, Helen Ingram, UC-Irvine, and Leigh Raymond, Purdue University
This presentation will set the stage by summarizing major trends and issues across the natural resources spectrum.

9:15 Natural Resources and Constitutional Law

James May, Widener University School of Law
How evolving constitutional law principles influence natural resources law and policy.

9:45 Discussion

10:00 Morning Break

10:30 PANEL: Changing Perspectives, Paradigms, and Interrelationships

Moderator—Nestor Davidson, University of Colorado School of Law

- Why Care about the Polar Bear? Economic Analysis of Environmental Law and Policy

Lisa Heinzerling, Georgetown Law School
How economic analysis as currently practiced slights the true value of natural resources, with particular reference to the polar bear and the future.

- The Intersection of Environmental Law and Natural Resource Law

Karin Sheldon, Vermont Law School
How the values and ideologies of environmental law - a discipline that has emerged only in recent decades - are, and are not, integrated with resources law.

- Federalism and Natural Resource Policy

Robert Fischman, Indiana University - Bloomington
The shifting balance between federal and state authority over natural resource management, especially public lands.

- The Growing Influence of Tort and Property Law on Natural Resources Law

Alexandra Klass, University of Minnesota Law School
How the development of natural resource law and policy increasingly takes into account issues of tort and property law.

12:15 Discussion

12:30 Lunch on the patio

Session 2 - The New Playing Field and The Public and Private Players

- 1:30 PANEL: Governance, Planning, & Public Participation
Moderator — Michael Gheleta, Brownstein Hyatt Farber Schreck

- Deciding who Decides: Agencies, Courts and the Public's Role in Natural Resource Law

Mark Squillace, University of Colorado School of Law
How agencies make resource management decisions, including the use of public participation, as well as how the roles of the legislative and judicial branches have changed over time.

- Tribal Perspectives on Natural Resource Policy
Donald Wharton, Native American Rights Fund
The role of Tribes in natural resource management on Native American lands. What are the appropriate roles of Tribes, State and federal agencies, and the public in decisions affecting tribal resources?

- What is in a name? Why Multiple-Use Management Could, But Rarely Does, Result in Wilderness Protection

James Rasband, Brigham Young Univ. J. Reuben Clark Law School
What does the story of Interior Secretary Babbitt's wilderness re-inventory, the creation of wilderness inventory areas, and their subsequent demise as a result of the federal government's settlement of a lawsuit with Utah tell us about the importance of naming and labeling in natural resources law? Is planning for preservation possible in a multiple use regime?

3:00 Discussion

3:15 Afternoon Break

3:45 Sources of Stress and the Changing Context of Natural Resources Law and Policy in the New West

Dr. William Travis, Dept. of Geography, Univ. of Colorado
The West will grow faster than the nation as a whole for the foreseeable future, and population growth, economic change, sprawling land development, and even climate change will make the future unlike the past. What are the major trends and what does this changing context mean for resources law?

4:15 Resource Rights and Methods of Accommodating Change - A Functional Approach

Eric Freyfogle, University of Illinois College of Law
Describing the challenge of creating resource use regimes that can successfully address the many conflicts among uses and users that inevitably arise over time - why the current regime of precisely-defined private rights is insufficient, and why we need to think about ways to promote resource governance regimes at a more local level with greater involvement of the resource users.

4:45 Discussion

5:30 Natural Resource Law Center 25th Anniversary Reception and Barbecue

Thursday, June 7

8:30 Understanding Natural Resources Law & Policy through Case Studies
