REMOVING OBSTACLES TO A LEGAL EDUCATION

How scholarships are uplifting
the next generation of lawyers

Colorado Law
UNIVERSITY OF COLORADO BOULDER

MESSAGE FROM THE DEAN

“At Colorado Law, scholarships have provided a beacon of hope and a pathway to achievement. These scholarships have allowed us to attract not only the future legal giants of Colorado and the nation but, just as importantly, the civic giants who will champion justice and fairness in our society.”

Today, I wish to reflect upon a topic that has left an indelible mark on my own life and countless others: the profound impact of scholarship support.

Scholarships have been instrumental in shaping the trajectory of my own academic journey. As a young student coming from a background where options were limited, I received offers of full scholarships from prestigious institutions such as UCLA and UC Berkeley. Ultimately, I chose to attend Princeton, and there's no doubt that without the transformative power of scholarships, I could not have embarked upon the academic odyssey that has brought me here today, serving as your proud dean.

Reflecting upon my own experiences, I am acutely aware of the changing landscape of legal education. Though crucial to my undergraduate pursuits, scholarships didn't play much of a role in my time at law school. Those of you who attended law school a few decades ago know firsthand that public law school tuition fees were comparatively low, and the income earned from many summer associate positions was more than sufficient to cover the costs. The reality today's students face is vastly different. The financial burden of pursuing a legal education has grown exponentially, making scholarships mission critical.

At Colorado Law, scholarships have provided a beacon of hope and a pathway to achievement. These scholarships have allowed us to attract not only the future legal giants of Colorado and the nation but, just as importantly, the civic giants who will champion justice and fairness in our society.

It is with immense gratitude that I extend my heartfelt appreciation to the alumni donors who make scholarships possible. Your generosity has empowered generations of students to pursue their dreams and contribute to the legal profession and society at large. You have provided the means for deserving individuals to transform their lives, and your impact will resonate far beyond the confines of our campus.

As we celebrate these successes, we also find ourselves mourning the loss of one of our beloved community members, Charles Wilkinson. Charles was an accomplished professor and a distinguished scholar. Long before I came to Colorado Law and became personally acquainted with Charles, his scholarly work on the public trust doctrine helped to guide me as a junior professor teaching property law. I was far from alone in admiring Charles—he was an esteemed mentor to many, and a source of inspiration for all who knew him. His unwavering commitment to justice, his profound love for the law, and his compassionate spirit touched the lives of countless students, colleagues, and community members.

The pages of this magazine are filled with stories of achievements and aspirations, as we celebrate the role scholarships have played in shaping the lives of our students and graduates. Let us be reminded of the transformative power of education, and the importance of ensuring that it remains accessible to all. Together, we can continue to build upon our legacy of excellence, propelling our institution and its graduates to even greater heights.

In closing, I extend my deepest appreciation to every one of you. It is through your dedication that we are able to make a difference in the lives of our students, and through their accomplishments, we create a brighter future for us all.

Colorado Law Celebrates Class of 2023

On Friday, May 12, 2023, a total of 197 graduates from around the world gathered with faculty, family, and dear friends for the 2023 graduation recognition ceremony at Macky Auditorium. The graduating class included 175 Juris Doctor recipients, 11 Master of Studies in Law (MSL) recipients, and 11 recipients of LLM degrees.

IN BRIEF

“Serving as a lawyer is a noble calling, and you all have this opportunity and obligation to make a positive impact on our world.”

Attorney General Phil Weiser

New Directors Take the Helm

This fall, two of Colorado Law's esteemed research centers welcomed new executive directors:

Brad Bernthal '01 became executive director of Silicon Flatirons, and Chris Winter was named executive director of the Getches-Wilkinson Center for Natural Resources, Energy, and the Environment.

Professor Brad Bernthal '01 became Silicon Flatirons' permanent executive director effective June 1. The move came 18 years after Bernthal first joined the center, in 2005, as a Silicon Flatirons Fellow. Bernthal is now an associate professor of law at Colorado Law with specialty in the fields of entrepreneurial law, early-stage finance, and innovation policy. He is the founder and director of Silicon Flatirons' Entrepreneurship Initiative, which supports entrepreneurship in the region and is a vital connector between the CU campus and the surrounding high-tech entrepreneurial community. Bernthal was part of the small cadre that launched CU's New Venture Challenge, which recently completed its 16th year.

Silicon Flatirons works to propel the future of law, policy, and entrepreneurship in the digital age, and as executive director, Bernthal is responsible for leading the center's strategic direction and operations. Through its initiatives, events, publications, and student programs, he will continue to build on the center's work to catalyze critical conversations among diverse stakeholders and develop professionals ready to lead.

Bernthal received a BA from the University of Kansas and a JD from Colorado Law.

What's been your proudest Silicon Flatirons moment to date?

It is special when Colorado Law alumni who were closely involved in Silicon Flatirons while in law school become expert professionals and return to bring along the next generation of Colorado Law students. Silicon Flatirons inspires a lot of this virtuous cycle. My colleague Blake Reid '10 once was a student in the Tech Law and Policy Clinic, and then he came back to do a superb job as the professor running the clinic. More recently, Ariel Diamond West '17, now with DLA Piper, took on an outsized leadership role to plug current students into the D.C. technology policy scene. Similarly, Meredith Ashlock '14 and Bryan McCutcheon '11, each of whom were once students in the Entrepreneurial Law Clinic, last year did a terrific job co-teaching the ELC. I could go on and on. Bottom line: it is amazing to see how individuals stay connected to Silicon Flatirons over time.

What are your top priorities for Silicon Flatirons?

My priority is to ensure that fabulous people—initiative directors, staff, and those in our network—want to be involved with Silicon Flatirons. In order to succeed, we must have leading technology policy thinkers, great innovators, and a terrific staff excited about Silicon Flatirons. Lorne Michaels, producer of Saturday Night Live, is a role model. Lorne continually identifies talent, provides a powerful platform, and is protective about the show's brand. My job, similarly, is to find and support great talent associated with technology policy and entrepreneurship, get leading thinkers into the spotlight, protect the Silicon Flatirons' brand, and otherwise get out of the way.

What are the most significant ways you've seen the center change and evolve over the past 24 years?

Steven Wright has a great line: "It's a small world. But I wouldn't want to have to paint it." This pretty much sums up technology policy today. When Silicon Flatirons launched in 1999, the focus was narrowly upon telecommunications, especially competition in the phone network and the transition to digital systems. Fast-forward to 2023, and technology policy issues are everywhere in society. Silicon Flatirons' expertise, not surprisingly, reflects today's ubiquity of technology issues. We now have deep expertise in artificial intelligence (Harry Surden), privacy (Margot Kaminski), spectrum (Dale Hatfield and Keith Gremben), technology platforms (Blake Reid), and entrepreneurship (which I lead).

CHRIS WINTER JOINS GETCHES-WILKINSON CENTER

With 25 years of experience in natural resources and environmental law, Chris Winter brings a remarkable track record in environmental advocacy, education, and policy development, making him an ideal leader for the renowned center named for two iconic figures in the law school's environmental law history, former dean David Getches and Distinguished Professor Charles Wilkinson.

In 2001 Winter co-founded a nonprofit law center based in Portland, Oregon, that represents public interest clients in federal and state courts across the Pacific Northwest.

He has won several challenging cases on behalf of grassroots organizations facing daunting odds and formidable opposition. Notably, Winter represented Alaska Native organizations in the U.S. Arctic, successfully protecting their subsistence activities from the impacts of offshore oil and gas exploration. He also served as lead counsel in Rosemere Neighborhood Ass'n v. U.S. E.P.A., a landmark case that shed light on the EPA's inadequate investigation of citizen complaints under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act. His litigation record includes numerous victories on a wide range of issues in federal and state courts.

Most recently, Winter led a national advocacy organization working at the intersection of outdoor recreation and public land management. He spearheaded efforts to restore Bears Ears National Monument, promote human-powered outdoor recreation, and conserve public lands.

Winter earned a BA from Cornell and a JD from the University of Michigan.

What excites you the most about joining the Getches-Wilkinson Center and Colorado Law?

The GWC and Colorado Law have been leading the field of natural resources and environmental law for 50 years, and I am thrilled at the opportunity to contribute to that legacy of excellence for this community. I am drawn to this position by the mission, the people, and the impact of the GWC, and I can't wait to get started.

What are your top priorities for the GWC?

The American West is facing unprecedented challenges in managing our public resources as we confront the impacts of climate change, population growth, and the transition to a clean energy economy. I want to position the GWC to lead the innovation of natural resources law and policy to meet this moment while preparing the next generation of professionals who will continue this critical work in the years to come.

You've dedicated much of your career to public land management, environmental justice, and representing Indigenous communities. What drew you to these areas?

I grew up spending time with my maternal grandparents, who were Japanese immigrants and farmers in Utah. I believe these experiences opened my mind at a young age to different ways that people connect with the land around them, which eventually drew me to learn more about environmental justice. When I started working directly with Indigenous communities in northern Alaska, I was inspired by how they navigated the complex intersection of climate change, resource protection, and their subsistence traditions.

What are your favorite ways to enjoy the outdoors?

I've always been drawn to the mountains, a gift I inherited from my father and grandfather. I love climbing, backcountry skiing, and exploring vertical terrain.

Reflections on Mark Loewenstein's 44-Year Career at Colorado Law

Since joining the faculty in 1979, Professor Mark Loewenstein has been a steadfast member of the Colorado Law community, teaching numerous courses—including Contracts, Corporations, Securities Litigation and Enforcement, and Agency, Partnership and the LLC—and mentoring hundreds of students. He's served as associate dean three times: for faculty development, research, and academic affairs, as well as on numerous law school and university committees.

A prolific author and speaker in the areas of business associations, agency law, and securities law, with a particular interest in corporate governance, his widely used casebook, Agency, Partnership and the LLC: The Law of Unincorporated Business Enterprises (with J. Dennis Hynes '60), is used in business law school classrooms across the nation. As Professor Loewenstein nears retirement, we look back at his academic career.

What accomplishments over the course of your career have brought you the most satisfaction, and why?

Occasionally a former student reaches out to tell me that I made a positive difference in their life. Sometimes that is a chance encounter, but regardless of the circumstances, I am always taken aback because the student generally is not one who came to my office for help or otherwise struck up a relationship with me. To have made a difference in another person's life is, at least in part, what teaching is all about. If we are committed to the craft of teaching—to be prepared, to impart our commitment to the law, to model competent and ethical behavior—you can reach students where they are and maybe make a difference.

How has the field of business law evolved since you began your career?

Business law has undergone a revolution of sorts in the past 50 years (gasp!). When I started practice in 1974, businesses were organized as corporations or partnerships and the rules governing each were largely decades old. But that started to change at about the time I graduated law school, with the advent of limited liability companies. LLCs are now, by far, the dominant form of business entity. The law that developed around LLCs then triggered a change in partnership and corporate law that, in turn, resulted in significant changes in tax law and securities regulation. In addition, a number of new business entity forms (e.g., limited liability limited partnerships, decentralized autonomous organizations) are now available to entrepreneurs. I have been fortunate to be a member of the Colorado Bar Association business entity committee that drafted or re-drafted the Colorado statutes on these topics.

When you think back on your academic career, what memories come to mind?

I have many fond memories: seeing my students graduate, launch successful careers, and retire before I do (!); watching the Wolf Law Building become a reality; teaching at Hokkaido University in Japan as a Fulbright lecturer; and meeting with several Supreme Court justices who visited the law school—Justices Breyer, Scalia, Ginsburg, Thomas, Stevens, Gorsuch, Sotomayor, and Kagan.

Another memory was one from the University of Michigan law school, where I was a visiting professor in the fall of 1999. I taught a course in business associations and had about 90 students in the class. One day I called on a student and she responded that I had already called on her. After a moment to collect my thoughts, I answered that I had already called on everyone in the class and she immediately responded that I had not. I then asked the rest of the students to raise a hand if I had not yet called on them. Naturally, no one did, and I told the student, "See, I have called on everyone. Now what is the answer to my question?" The story apparently got around Michigan quickly because one of my colleagues at Colorado Law had heard it from his son, who was then a student at Michigan.

What does Colorado Law mean to you?

I have always been impressed with the quality and decency of our students and the accomplishments of my faculty colleagues. I am proud to have been a member of this faculty and glad I never pursued the other opportunities that have come my way over the past 40-plus years.

What are your plans for retirement?

I'm not sure yet. I am a FINRA (Financial Industry Regulatory Authority) arbitrator and may become an arbitrator with the American Arbitration Association, so I plan to do some arbitrations. I will pursue some volunteer opportunities in the community. But mostly, my wife Linda and I plan to do some traveling, babysitting our grandkids, and enjoying the great outdoors here in Colorado.

AHMED WHITE

Under the Iron Heel: The Wobblies and the Capitalist War on Radical Workers (University of California Press)

In 1917, the Industrial Workers of the World (IWW) was rapidly gaining strength and members. Within a decade, this radical union, whose members were known as the “Wobblies,” was effectively destroyed, the victim of the most remarkable campaign of legal repression and vigilantism in American history. Under the Iron Heel is the first comprehensive account of this campaign.

Founded in 1905, the IWW offered to the millions of workers aggrieved by industrial capitalism the promise of a better world. But its growth, coinciding with World War I and the Russian Revolution and driven by uncompromising militancy, was seen by powerful capitalists and government officials as an existential threat that had to be eliminated. White documents the torrent of legal persecution and extralegal, sometimes lethal violence that shattered the IWW. In so doing, he reveals the remarkable courage of those who faced this campaign, lays bare the origins of the profoundly unequal and conflicted nation we know today, and uncovers disturbing truths about the law, political repression, and the limits of free speech and association in class society. The book was named the International Labor History Association’s Book of the Year Award for 2022 and received Princeton University’s Industrial Relations Section’s 2022 Richard A. Lester Book Award.

ANDREW SCHWARTZ

Investment Crowdfunding (Oxford University Press)

Andrew Schwartz, a global expert in the field of investment crowdfunding and Fulbright scholar, presents a comprehensive guide to a new online marketplace for entrepreneurial capital. He marries theory with a decade of on-the-ground research to give lawyers, students, scholars, and policymakers a one-stop shop for everything they need to know about investment crowdfunding, its regulation, and how to improve it. Readers will find Investment Crowdfunding an accessible and engaging introduction into what is poised to become a household phrase.

This book analyzes American law—in particular, the JOBS Act and Regulation Crowdfunding—and compares it to the legal regimes in the UK, Canada, the EU, Australia, and New Zealand. Schwartz’s prescription is liberal in the classical sense: policymakers should rely on private ordering and financial incentives, rather than law and regulation, to govern and police the market.

Constituting the definitive guide to the law and regulation of investment crowdfunding, the book provides a roadmap for policymakers to enact an effective regulatory framework for investment crowdfunding.

LOLITA BUCKNER INNISS

The Princeton Fugitive Slave: The Trials of James Collins Johnson (Fordham University Press)

James Collins Johnson made his name by escaping slavery in Maryland and fleeing to Princeton, New Jersey, where he built a life in a bustling community of African Americans working at what is now Princeton University. After only four years, he was recognized by a student from Maryland, arrested, and subjected to a trial for extradition under the 1793 Fugitive Slave Act. On the eve of his rendition, after attempts to free Johnson by force had failed, a local aristocratic white woman purchased Johnson’s freedom, allowing him to avoid re-enslavement. The Princeton Fugitive Slave reconstructs Johnson’s life, from birth and enslaved life in Maryland to his daring escape, sensational trial for re-enslavement, and last-minute change of fortune, and through to the end of his life in Princeton, where he remained a figure of local fascination.

Lolita Buckner Inniss builds a picture of Johnson on his own terms, piecing together the sparse evidence and disaggregating him from the other Black vendors with whom he was sometimes confused. By telling Johnson’s story and examining the relationship between antebellum Princeton’s Black residents and the economic engine that supported their community, the book questions the distinction between employment and servitude that shrinks and threatens to disappear when an individual’s freedom is circumscribed by immobility, lack of opportunity, and contingency on local interpretations of a hotly contested body of law.

The Princeton Fugitive Slave won the New Jersey Studies Academic Alliance Book Award, was reviewed in the New York Review of Books, and has been adopted for use in university classrooms around the country.

JENNIFER HENDRICKS

Essentially a Mother: A Feminist Approach to the Law of Pregnancy and Motherhood (University of California Press)

Essentially a Mother argues that the law of pregnancy and motherhood has been overrun by sexist ideology. Courts have held that a pregnant woman's nine months of gestation hardly count in her claim to parent the child she bears and that a man's brief moment of ejaculation matters more than a woman's labor. Armed with such dubious arguments, courts have stripped women of the right to abortion, treated surrogate mothers as mere vessels, and handed biological fathers—even those who became fathers through rape—automatic rights over women and their children. In this incisive and groundbreaking book, Jennifer Hendricks argues that feminists must overthrow the skewed value system that subordinates women, devalues caregiving, and denies too many the right to parent.

JUSTIN DESAUTELS-STEIN

The Right to Exclude: A Critical Race Approach to Sovereignty, Borders, and International Law (Oxford University Press)

In a world where racism and xenophobia are endemic, what is the role of international law? To the extent international rules are thought to have any relevance at all, the typical approach characterizes international law as on the side of racial justice. Human rights instruments like the United Nations' International Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination are paradigmatic, offering the world international agreements in which governments are directed to avoid racist behavior and promote antiracist action.

In The Right to Exclude, Justin Desautels-Stein goes against the grain and asks whether certain rules of international law might actually produce structures of racial hierarchy, rather than work to limit them. The intellectual fulcrum for this production, Desautels-Stein argues, lies in the ideological structures of sovereignty and property, the right to exclude that is shared in those twinned precincts, and the border regimes that result. Applying critical race theory to contemporary problems of migration, nationalism, multiculturalism, decolonization, and self-determination, Desautels-Stein expounds a theory of "postracial xenophobia," a structure of racial ideology that justifies and legitimates a pragmatic account of racialized foreignness, a racial xenos.

PIERRE SCHLAG

Twilight of the American State (University of Michigan Press)

The sudden emergence of the Trump nation surprised nearly everyone, including journalists, pundits, political consultants, and academics. When Trump won in 2016, his ascendancy was widely viewed as a fluke. Yet time showed it was instead the rise of a movement—angry, militant, revanchist, and unabashedly authoritarian.

How did this happen? Twilight of the American State offers a sweeping exploration of how law and legal institutions helped prepare the grounds for this rebellious movement. The controversial argument is that, viewed as a legal matter, the American state is not just a liberal democracy, as most Americans believe. Rather, the American state is composed of an uneasy and unstable combination of different versions of the state—liberal democratic, administered, neoliberal, and dissociative. Each of these versions arose through its own law and legal institutions. Each emerged at different times historically. Each was prompted by deficits in the prior versions. Each has survived displacement by succeeding versions. All remain active in the contemporary moment—creating the political-legal dysfunction America confronts today.

Pierre Schlag maps out a big-picture view of the tribulations of the American state. The book abjures conventional academic frameworks, sets aside prescriptions for quick fixes, dispenses with lamentations about polarization, and bypasses historical celebrations of the American spirit.

PAUL CAMPOS

A Fan's Life (University of Chicago Press)

A Fan's Life dives deep into the experience of being an ardent fan in a world defined more and more by the rhetoric of "winners" and "losers." In a series of tightly argued chapters that suture together memoir and social critique, Paul Campos chronicles his lifelong passion for University of Michigan football while meditating on fandom in the wake of the unprecedented year of 2020—when, for a time, a global pandemic took away professional and collegiate sports entirely. Fandom isn't just leisure, he shows; it's part of who we are, and part of even our politics, which in the age of Donald Trump have become increasingly tribal and bloody. Campos points toward where we might be heading, as our various partisan affiliations—fandoms with a grimly national significance—become even more intense and bitterly self-defining. As he shows, we're all fans of something, and making sense of fandom itself might offer a way to wrap our heads around our increasingly divided reality, on and off the field.

Lifting Up the Next Generation: The Impact of Scholarships

Between flattened state funding, rising tuition, and record inflation, scholarships have never been more vital when it comes to attracting the best and most promising applicants and ensuring that deserving students can pursue a Colorado Law education. As tuition costs have risen considerably, it is more important than ever that we provide financial support to our students and make legal education as affordable as possible.

Following nine consecutive years of flat costs, Colorado Law's tuition increased by 3% each year in 2021-22 and 2022-23, and by 4% in 2023-24.

"Notwithstanding the very real fact that Colorado Law has one of the best tuition rates in the country for this amount of excellence, it is still the case that a number of our students simply would not be able to participate in this experience if they did not have the scholarships that were provided by our donors," said Dean Lolita Buckner Inniss.

Meet a few Colorado Law students and alumni who benefited from scholarships—and see the very real impact that scholarships have.

SUPPORTING THE NEXT GENERATION OF DIVERSE LAWYERS

Colorado Law alumna Ciera Gonzalez '20 is building a future as a leader in Colorado's legal community—and she credits scholarship funding with helping her get there. Gonzalez received the prestigious Leaders in Law and Community (LILAC) Fellowship, a comprehensive three-year program that educates and cultivates leadership potential in students through scholarships covering law school tuition and fees, mentorship, and community engagement.

Growing up in Florida, Gonzalez always knew she wanted to be a lawyer. A love of reading fueled her desire, and she became the first in her family to attend college. When she visited Colorado Law, she knew immediately it was the place for her to spread her wings.

"I wanted the opportunity to see somewhere new and be on my own to grow independently. I was the first in my family to leave Florida," she said.

Gonzalez was part of the inaugural cohort of LILAC Fellows. Established in 2017, the program addresses diversity in the broadest sense by recruiting and developing students from backgrounds underrepresented in law schools and in the legal profession. LILAC Fellows are from financially disadvantaged backgrounds, have diverse cultural identities, or are individuals who have overcome significant obstacles. With their experiences, backgrounds, and accomplishments, LILAC Fellows have the potential to use their law degrees to be transformational leaders in law and community. To date, there have been 36 LILAC Fellows.

Gonzalez and her classmates had access to mentors, networking, and community that they might not have had otherwise. The experience instilled a sense that they could succeed—and thrive—in law school, despite not having an existing network of lawyers or extensive prior knowledge of the industry, she said.

"I came in with no legal background and no lawyers in my family to help, so it was helpful to have constant support and attention," said Gonzalez, who identifies as Hispanic and LGBTQ.

Twice each semester, local attorneys came to the law school to speak with LILAC Fellows one on one. Gonzalez connected with Judge Alfred Harrell, who retired from the Denver County Court bench in 2016, and who's been a mentor to her ever since.

"Those meetings gave us a built-in network early on and helped create those social ties, which got us off on really strong footing," she said.

The legal profession, which remains predominantly white and male, continues to face calls to better reflect the demographics of the populations it serves. According to the American Bar Association, 85% of active U.S. attorneys were white in 2019. In Colorado, where people of color comprise 34% of the state's population, they make up just 10% of practicing lawyers.

This begins in law schools. But, in 2019, 62% of law students nationwide were white; 12.7% were Hispanic, 7.8% were Black, 6.3% were Asian, and 4% identified as biracial or multiracial (American Bar Foundation).

“Alumni can take a lot of pride in contributing to LILAC and helping the next generation of diverse students find their way to the law.”

Ciera Gonzalez '20

“Being a LILAC Fellow taught me about the importance of diversity and committing to it. A lot of law firms preach about it, and all candidates ask about it in interviews, and the experience taught me how important it is to take action and have a voice in crafting DEI efforts at Snell & Wilmer,” said Gonzalez, who served on the firm’s hiring committee. “I’m passionate about spreading that in the community and supporting diverse candidates.”

LILAC also gave her the financial flexibility and freedom to explore her passion for the judiciary.

After graduation, Gonzalez went into Big Law, practicing general commercial litigation at Snell & Wilmer. A few years later, she wanted to explore a different area and so took a pay cut to transition to government work. She started as a clerk for Judge Regina Rodriguez '88 in the U.S. District Court for the District of Colorado in fall 2023.

“Loans would have kept me in private practice for a lot longer, less able to explore other career options,” Gonzalez said. “If I hadn’t received LILAC, I would have tried to make it work, but it would have dramatically changed the course of my career.”

Outside of work, Gonzalez gives back to the community as a volunteer with Law School ... Yes We Can!, where she mentors undergraduate students from underrepresented backgrounds who want to become lawyers.

“The enormous cost of higher education is a huge barrier for the sort of people we talk about wanting more of in the legal community. If you want more diverse viewpoints, but maybe don’t know the right path to get there, donating to LILAC is a great opportunity to create that diverse legal community in Colorado,” she said. “Alumni can take a lot of pride in contributing to LILAC and helping the next generation of diverse students find their way to the law.”

Ricardo Zorce '24

ALLEVIATING THE FINANCIAL BURDEN OF LAW SCHOOL

Like many law students, Ricardo Zorce '24 and Mel Roeder '23 paid their way through law school primarily through loans. With the average indebtedness of Colorado Law graduates who borrow clocking in at a whopping $100,000, choosing to take out loans is no small decision.

For Zorce, a first-generation law student who did not receive financial support from family members throughout law school, the thought of relying on loans to finance his education gave him pause—but he knew it would ultimately be worth it to pursue his dream of working in government.

“I wanted to go to law school for as long as I can remember. However, my decision to attend law school was set in stone when I was able to intern in a Georgia state court during my undergrad summers. The experience helped me really understand what it meant to practice law and showed me that the practice of law is a lifelong career of learning,” he said.

Between rising rent, tuition, and living expenses, he watched the numbers add up his 1L year. Then, as a 2L, he received a welcome reprieve in the form of a Law Alumni Scholarship, which allowed him to turn his attention to his studies—extracurriculars like law review and serving as treasurer for the Latinx Law Students Association—and his passion for mock trial instead of taking on a job to help with expenses.

The Law Alumni Scholarship is composed of proceeds from the annual Alumni Awards Banquet, which has raised more than $1 million to support Colorado Law since 2005 and supported over 70 scholarship awards.

A member of Colorado Law's national mock trial team and Barrister's Council executive board for mock trial division, Zorce recalls his most meaningful law school experience as competing in the American Association of Justice's National Student Trial Advocacy Competition in New Orleans. He also helped a team of 1Ls prepare for their first mock trial competition.

“I would not have been a part of it without the help of the scholarship,” he said.

The financial support showed him that he is not facing this burden alone, and that he has a community of alumni committed to supporting his journey through law school. While he grappled with the decision to go to law school and bear the costs of living on loans, the scholarship made him feel better about his decision.

"While there are many hurdles to overcome throughout the law school experience, scholarships decrease the size of hurdles for us in at least one aspect. Law school is a full-time job, and for students to have the best possibility of success, no student should have to work overtime at a second job just to pay for school and living expenses," he said.

For Mel Roeder '23, being selected for a Law Alumni Scholarship meant that their third year of law school was significantly more affordable, allowing them to turn their attention to public service.

"I went to law school because I am a helper by nature, and seeing the state of the world made me want to help make change, whether that be on an individual or large scale," said Roeder, a first-generation college graduate pursuing a career in civil rights and other plaintiff-focused areas of law.

With the reduced financial burden, Roeder was able to focus on their studies and participate in unpaid experiential learning opportunities like the American Indian Law Clinic and Natural Resources and Environmental Law Clinic.

Experiences like presenting to the Truth, Restoration, and Education Commission, which works to examine the true history of Colorado and what led to the genocide of Indigenous peoples in Colorado, as a student attorney in the American Indian Law Clinic allowed Roeder the chance to interact with and learn from members of the Indigenous community—a highlight of their law school career.

"I believe scholarships are so important because they help foster opportunities like clinics," Roeder said. "Not receiving this scholarship would have meant years added to my repayment, and I am eternally grateful to the donors who made it and the other scholarships I have received possible."

For the majority of Colorado Law students, the need to take out loans is necessary to ensure they are able to obtain a JD. "Our goal is to recruit and support highly qualified students with more financial support in the form of scholarship aid," explained Kristine Jackson, senior assistant dean of enrollment management.

"Law school is an extremely expensive endeavor to undertake, now more than ever, and scholarships help level the playing field and allow for students of all backgrounds to have amazing experiences like mine," Roeder said. "Any way to alleviate the financial burden of the next generation of our state and country's leaders will help promote the advancement and equity of all."

Historic Hiring

This fall, Colorado Law welcomed a record eight new faculty members whose wide-ranging expertise spans constitutional and immigration law, technology law and policy, environmental law, civil rights, gender and the law, and more.

“Each of these individuals brings with them remarkable intellect, teaching prowess, and commitment to our students,” said Dean Lolita Buckner Inniss. “We are fortunate to have attracted such talented scholars and teachers, and I have no doubt that they will make significant contributions to our community.”

SHAMIKA DALTON

Shamika Dalton brings her expertise in teaching, leadership, and scholarship to Colorado Law, joining the faculty as associate professor and director of the William A. Wise Law Library.

Dalton most recently served as associate professor and associate director of the Katz Law Library at the University of Tennessee Knoxville College of Law, where she oversaw the daily operation of the Katz Law Library and taught legal research classes.

Dalton began her career as a reference librarian at the University of Florida Levin College of Law Legal Information Center in 2012 and rose through the ranks to become the associate director for public services and professor of legal research. She has dedicated her research and professional service to celebrating the contributions of law librarians of color, educating the profession about the importance of racial diversity, and advocating for cultural competency in legal research instruction.

In July 2019, Dalton received the Joseph L. Andrews Award for her book, Celebrating Diversity: A Legacy of Minority Leadership in the American Association of Law Libraries (2nd ed.). She holds a bachelor's degree in social work, Master of Library Studies, and JD from North Carolina Central University.

PRATHEEPAN GULASEKARAM

Highly esteemed constitutional and immigration law scholar Pratheepan (Deep) Gulasekaram joins the Colorado Law faculty as professor of law. Gulasekaram's research focuses on the constitutional rights of noncitizens and federalism concerns in immigration law. He co-authored the leading immigration casebook used in law schools, Immigration & Citizenship: Process and Policy (West Academic, 9th ed., 2021). His book The New Immigration Federalism (Cambridge University Press, 2015) provides an in-depth empirical and theoretical analysis of the resurgence of state and local immigration lawmaking. He has also extensively explored the relationship between the Second Amendment and immigrants as a way of understanding constitutional protections for noncitizens.

Before joining Colorado Law, Gulasekaram taught at Santa Clara University School of Law. He has also taught as a visiting professor at Stanford Law School, Berkeley Law School, and University of California Berkeley, and as acting assistant professor of lawyering at New York University School of Law. Prior to academia, he was a litigation associate with O'Melveny & Myers LLP and Susman Godfrey LLP and served as judicial clerk to Judge Jacques L. Wiener Jr. on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in New Orleans. He dedicates his spare time to improving healthcare access for children in under-resourced communities through World Children's Initiative, a nonprofit organization he co-founded.

Gulasekaram earned a BA from Brown University and a JD from Stanford Law School.

MARYAM JAMSHIDI

Maryam Jamshidi joins Colorado Law as associate professor of law.

Previously a member of the faculty at the University of Florida Levin College of Law, she teaches and writes in the areas of national security, public international law, the law of foreign relations, and tort law. Her scholarship focuses on the relationship between the private sphere and national security law as well as the law of foreign relations. In exploring these dynamics, Jamshidi's work draws on political and critical theory, as well as sociology.

Prior to joining the Levin College of Law, Jamshidi served as an assistant professor of lawyering at the NYU Law School. She also worked as an associate in several leading Washington, D.C., law firms, including White & Case, where she worked primarily on issues relating to national security and foreign relations law. Jamshidi clerked for the Hon. Gladys Kessler of the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia.

Jamshidi received a bachelor's in political science from Brown University, a Master of Science in political theory with merit at the London School of Economics, and a JD from the University of Pennsylvania Law School.

VIVEK KRISHNAMURTHY

Vivek Krishnamurthy joins Colorado Law as director of the Samuelson-Glushko Technology Law & Policy Clinic (TLPC). He previously was the Samuelson-Glushko Professor of Law at the University of Ottawa and director of CIPPIC — the Samuelson-Glushko Canadian Internet Policy and Public Interest Clinic.

Krishnamurthy's teaching, scholarship, and clinical legal practice focus on the complex regulatory and human-rights-related challenges that arise in cyberspace. He advises governments, activists, and companies on the human rights impacts of new technologies and is a frequent public commentator on emerging technology and public policy issues.

Krishnamurthy was previously the assistant director of Harvard Law School's Cyberlaw Clinic and counsel in the global business and human rights practice at Foley Hoag LLP. He is a Rhodes Scholar and clerked for the Hon. Morris J. Fish of the Supreme Court of Canada upon his graduation from Yale Law School. He is a faculty associate of the Berkman Klein Center for Internet & Society at Harvard University, senior associate of the Human Rights Initiative at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, and an alternate member of the Global Network Initiative's Board of Directors.

SARAH MATSUMOTO

Sarah Matsumoto joins Colorado Law as a clinical associate professor of law, where she will lead the Getches-Green Natural Resources, Energy, and Environmental Law Clinic. She previously taught at the Willamette University College of Law, where she served as an assistant professor of clinical education.

Matsumoto was for three years a clinical fellow at the University of Denver Sturm College of Law, where she taught in the Environmental Law Clinic. In that role, she supervised student teams working on oil- and gas-oriented permit challenges, water management, and concentrated animal feeding operation (CAFO) issues, and oversaw other advocacy efforts aimed at improving water and air quality in Colorado and the Rocky Mountain region. Matsumoto also co-taught the clinic seminar and was a member of DU's Rocky Mountain Collective on Race, Place, and Law.

Before joining the DU clinic, Matsumoto represented plaintiffs in environmental citizen suits at a firm in Eugene, Oregon, where she was part of the legal team that brought the first successful Resource Conservation and Recovery Act citizen suit against a CAFO for polluting groundwater through its improper management of waste. Prior to attending law school, Matsumoto worked in research and development for an international coffee company.

Matsumoto is a graduate of the University of Washington and Seattle University School of Law.

“Each of these individuals brings with them remarkable intellect, teaching prowess, and commitment to our students.”

Dean Lolita Buckner Inniss

BLAKE E. REID '10

Already a valued and highly respected member of the Colorado Law community, Professor Blake E. Reid '10 transitioned from his role as clinical professor and director of the Samuelson-Glushko Technology Law & Policy Clinic to associate professor of law on the research faculty. Reid will continue to serve as a faculty director of the Telecom and Platforms Initiative at Silicon Flatirons.

Reid studies, teaches, and practices in the intersection of law, policy, and technology. In his new role, he will continue to teach Telecom Law and Policy, Introduction to Intellectual Property, and other courses in Colorado Law's technology and intellectual property curriculum.

Prior to joining Colorado Law, Reid was a staff attorney and graduate fellow in First Amendment and media law at the Institute for Public Representation at Georgetown Law. He also served as a law clerk for Justice Nancy E. Rice on the Colorado Supreme Court.

Reid holds a BS in computer science from the University of Colorado Boulder, a JD from Colorado Law, and a Master of Laws from Georgetown University.

WADIE SAID

A widely respected voice in criminal law, human rights, and national security law, Wadie Said joins the Colorado Law faculty as a professor of law.

Previously a faculty member at the University of South Carolina School of Law, Said's scholarship analyzes the challenges and human rights implications of criminal prosecution and immigration enforcement. His book Crimes of Terror: The Legal and Political Implications of Federal Terrorism Prosecutions, the first comprehensive legal analysis of the criminal terrorist prosecution in the U.S., was published by Oxford University Press in 2015. He teaches courses in criminal law, criminal procedure, immigration law, and seminars on international human rights law and counterterrorism.

Said served as law clerk to Chief Judge Charles P. Sifton of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York and as a litigation associate in the New York office of Debevoise and Plimpton. There, he helped coordinate the firm's pro bono political asylum program. He is an elected member of the American Law Institute and serves on the board of editors of Amerasia Journal.

Said is a graduate of Princeton University and the Columbia University School of Law, where he served as an articles editor of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review.

DARÍA ROITHMAYR

Daría Roithmayr joins the Colorado Law faculty as a professor of law. She teaches and writes about persistent structural racism and racial exploitation. Her 2014 book, Reproducing Racism: How Everyday Choices Lock in White Advantage (NYU Press), explores the self-reinforcing dynamics of persistent racial inequality. She is working on a new book, Racism Pays, which explores the way that recent innovations in the digital economy have relied on racial exploitation to get off the ground.

Before joining Colorado Law, Roithmayr taught for 17 years at the University of Southern California Gould School of Law and nine years at the University of Illinois College of Law. She has also been a visiting researcher at Harvard University and a visiting law professor at the University of Michigan, Georgetown, and Yale.

Roithmayr received her BS from UCLA, and her JD, magna cum laude, from the Georgetown University Law Center, where she was a member of Order of the Coif and served as an editor of the Georgetown Law Journal. She clerked for the Hon. Marvin J. Garbis, judge of the U.S. District Court for the District of Maryland.

Korey Wise Innocence Project

case in 2019 and embarked on a three-year-long journey to uncover additional evidence of Hogan's innocence.

"Immediately, Jason's case looked like a wrongful conviction based on eyewitness misidentification," Moyes said. "Although the victim positively identified Jason as the robber, she initially told police she did not get a good look at the robber's face. Plus, she reported that the robber had a sun tattoo on his left hand, and Jason had no tattoos on his hands."

Beyond the victim's problematic identification, the state had little evidence to convict Hogan.

KWIP learned that an identical robbery/kidnapping took place at the Cherry Creek Shopping Center five days after the crime for which Hogan was convicted. Because the two crimes and suspect descriptions were strikingly similar, the police concluded that the same man committed both crimes. However, police quickly developed compelling evidence that Hogan did not commit the second robbery, including:

The victim in the second case failed to pick Hogan's picture from a photo lineup and said that the man who robbed her was not in the lineup.

A fingerprint lifted from where the robber touched the second victim's car did not match Hogan's.

The second victim described another distinctive feature of her attacker—a heavily pockmarked complexion. This description did not fit Hogan.

"Eyewitness misidentification is one of the most common factors in cases of wrongful conviction," Moyes explained. "Nationally, 28% of all exonerations involve mistaken eyewitness identification. Human memory is highly imperfect and fragile. And, when people experience a stressful event like a violent crime, they are much less able to make an accurate identification."

Though due process required the police to share the exculpatory evidence about the second robbery with Hogan's lawyers, they failed to do so. Consequently, the jury that convicted Hogan never learned about the second identical crime and all of the evidence showing that Hogan was not the robber.

In 2022, KWIP shared this new evidence with the Conviction Review Unit (CRU) at the Denver District Attorney's Office. KWIP was prepared to file a motion for post-conviction relief based on the new evidence, but such motions can take years to litigate in the courts.

In a historic victory, Korey Wise Innocence Project client Jason Hogan was released from prison after receiving a 77-year sentence for a crime he did not commit.

Despite safeguards in our criminal legal system, innocent people are convicted of crimes and sentenced to years in prison. The Korey Wise Innocence Project (KWIP) at Colorado Law works to exonerate the wrongfully convicted in Colorado and advocate for reforms to prevent future injustices. The project strives to reform the criminal legal system with two goals at its forefront: to prevent wrongful convictions at the front end and to make it easier to correct mistakes when they do happen.

An integral part of the Colorado Law and CU Boulder communities, KWIP provides mentorship, training, and inspiration to law and undergraduate students through both hands-on legal work and passionate advocacy.

Reflecting on KWIP's impact on students, executive director Anne-Marie Moyes said, "Law students gain important insights through their work with KWIP. They see the long arc of a criminal case—from trial through every step of the appeals process." She continued, "They obtain a deeper understanding of why it's so important to have a competent defense lawyer and a fair prosecutor at each of these stages. After graduation, most KWIP students enter careers as public defenders or prosecutors, and they carry these important lessons into that work."

KWIP celebrated a monumental success last spring with the release of client Jason Hogan on May 9, 2023. Convicted of a robbery/kidnapping at the Cherry Creek Shopping Center in Denver, he was nine years into serving a 77-year sentence when the yearslong efforts of KWIP bore fruit.

Because Hogan's case appeared to be a wrongful conviction based on mistaken eyewitness identification, KWIP took on the

“We are really fortunate to be part of the Colorado Law community,” Moyes said. “Law students bring incredible passion to this work, and we’re able to take on more cases with their help.”

The CRU then offered to let Hogan enter an Alford plea to a lesser charge and be resentenced to time-served. By accepting the CRU’s offer, Hogan was able to avoid a long court battle and return home to his family immediately.

Hogan’s case is just one of a number of cases taken on by KWIP this past year and is the result of yearslong dedication from Colorado Law faculty, students, and volunteers. While there is still more demand for their services than they can satisfy, KWIP now has the bandwidth to take on complex cases and seek justice for more innocent clients. This capacity to take on more work was one of Moyes’ goals since her tenure began as executive director in 2019. Over the past few years, KWIP has grown from a staff of two lawyers to six.

Moyes also made it a priority for KWIP to take on more policy work, hiring Jeanne Segil as the project’s first policy director in 2022. In her first year on the job, Segil drafted KWIP’s first piece of legislation—a bill to ease access to post-conviction DNA testing in Colorado—and got that bill signed into law.

Law students play an integral role in continuing this work. This past year, KWIP’s Faculty Director Ann England focused her Criminal Defense Clinic on innocence work. Eleven clinic students—all 2Ls and 3Ls—together took on five new KWIP cases. The students carefully reviewed trial transcripts and discovery, put together investigation plans, interviewed witnesses, and drafted motions. Some of their cases look very promising, and KWIP is hopeful about freeing their innocent clients.

“We are really fortunate to be part of the Colorado Law community,” Moyes said. “Law students bring incredible passion to this work, and we’re able to take on more cases with their help.”

In 2022, Gov. Jared Polis signed into law a bill written by the Korey Wise Innocence Project to ease access to post-conviction DNA testing in Colorado.

Celebrating the Best of Colorado Law

More than 350 alumni, students, faculty, and friends attended the 42nd annual Alumni Awards Banquet on March 16, 2023, a momentous occasion that celebrated the remarkable achievements and contributions of six distinguished alumni who have significantly impacted the legal profession and their communities.

New this year was a special expo highlighting various departments, organizations, and programs at the law school including the legal clinics, Korey Wise Innocence Project, Council for Racial Justice and Equity, Career Development Office, American Indian Law Program, and the Byron White Center for the Study of American Constitutional Law.

With your support, the event raised $136,045 for student scholarships, programs, and initiatives. Thank you!

Taking a brief pause from the presentation of awards, attendees were treated to a fireside chat with two Leaders in Law and Community (LILAC) Fellows, Larrisa Alire '23 and Jemil Kassahun '24, who spoke with Caitlin McHugh '12 about their experience at Colorado Law, their goals for after graduation, and the impact of the LILAC Fellowship program.

Dan Vigil '82 Gives Back

Throughout his many roles at Colorado Law—student, staff member, alumnus, and instructor—Dan Vigil '82 witnessed the impact of the Dean's Fund for Excellence. That's why he decided to make a generous estate gift benefiting this important fund, which provides discretionary funding for the dean to support a range of initiatives.

"I know from experience that the Dean's Fund for Excellence is important; it allows the dean flexibility and the ability to spend money when and where needed," he said.

The Dean's Fund has supported students in crisis, such as those dealing with an unexpected death in the family or a serious illness, helped host prestigious speakers at the law school, and assisted with necessary travel for faculty to attend a conference.

"The fund is vital to the institution and to the dean," explained Vigil.

Vigil began his legal career clerking for a Denver District Court judge before entering private practice.

In 1984 he began teaching at Colorado Law, where he later became associate dean for student affairs. Vigil has taught Criminal Law, Legal Method, Legal Writing, Appellate Advocacy, and Professional Responsibility at Colorado Law and Water Law and Legal Profession at the University of Denver Sturm College of Law. In 2003 Vigil began teaching at DU Law, where he currently holds the title of assistant dean emeritus. In 2021 he received the Knous Award, Colorado Law's highest alumni honor.

"Teaching law at CU was a great challenge and a great honor. Being associate dean for student affairs allowed me to help students succeed and hopefully thrive. The experience was very rewarding and fulfilling," he said.

"I am remembering Colorado Law in my estate plan because the law school welcomed me as a student, a teacher, and as an associate dean. Graduating from Colorado Law greatly enhanced my life and career. For that I am grateful."

To learn more about leaving Colorado Law in your estate plan, please contact Robert Garelick at robert.garelick@colorado.edu.

Robert Garelick

Named Assistant Dean for Advancement

Robert Garelick joined Colorado Law as its assistant dean for advancement on July 24. He most recently served as managing senior director of development in the University of Colorado Boulder College of Arts and Sciences.

"I am thrilled to be joining the law school, where I will be surrounded by a smart and driven faculty, staff, and alumni base who work to nurture and prepare students to be lawyers and caring individuals who will go on to serve society by protecting justice and human rights," Garelick said. "My goal as we grow the fundraising effort at the law school is that when people think of CU Boulder, the law school and our quest to better society are at the top of their minds."

A CU Boulder graduate himself, Garelick has been proud to call Boulder home for more than 20 years. Passionate about great causes and

Sonny Cave '85: Doing What Is Right for People and the Planet

After an esteemed career as an ethics and compliance professional, including serving as founding general counsel and chief compliance and ethics officer at ON Semiconductor, Sonny Cave '85 is giving back to the next generation of lawyers and business leaders at Colorado Law.

In 2016 Cave established an ethics and compliance endowment fund at Colorado Law to support programs, scholarships, and faculty to provide more avenues for students to get a head start in this growing profession. His recent gift to the Dean's Fund and the Sonny Cave Ethics and Compliance Fund Endowment will create even more opportunities for students to pursue meaningful and rewarding careers in both law and ethics.

"The concept of doing what is right for human health and the environment, even when that path requires going above and beyond legal rules and regulations, applies just as well to business practices and strategy," said Cave, who connected his background in planetary ethics with business while working in-house as Motorola's first environmental, health, and safety legal expert.

As a law student, he was inspired by Professor Charles Wilkinson and credits Wilkinson's guidance with teaching him how to dream big about ways to improve society.

"I wasn't able to take one of his classes, but I was determined to get to know him and experience his wisdom in my special fields of legal interest. So, I introduced myself and would regularly stop by his office, often unannounced, just to test some of my far-fetched legal theories and ideas," Cave said.

One idea caught Wilkinson's ear—a novel way to interpret the definition of "navigable waters" to expand state ownership of the land beneath Colorado's streams and rivers.

"Professor Wilkinson listened with interest, and then with his patented smirk proceeded to say that while that was certainly some creative thinking, it wouldn't actually work," Cave recalled. "But rather than leave it there, he spent a lot of extra time with me then and throughout the rest of my studies to provide encouragement to me to keep brainstorming no matter how crazy it might seem at first, because that type of thinking would not only carry me far in life but also would bring currently unforeseeable benefits to society. Those words rang true for me way back then, and still do to this day."

Like Wilkinson, Cave is committed to inspiring and teaching the next generation of lawyers and business leaders. He hopes his gift will inspire others to give back.

"I sincerely hope that this gift will go beyond its original intentions in a way that will unleash a spark of inspiration and kindle a new sense of altruism and philanthropy in others to be kind and generous in supporting worthy causes," he said.

philanthropy, he joined the CU Boulder Advancement team in 2017 after working for several years as an executive director in the healthcare space.

Previously, he held leadership roles in the corporate sector, creating a 17-country network in metal manufacturing and developing regional sales teams in the U.S., Europe, and Asia.

In addition to his considerable professional responsibilities, Garelick serves on the executive committee and as chair of the development committee for the Children's Diabetes Foundation.

LETTER FROM THE

Law Alumni Board Chair Caitlin McHugh '12

Colorado Law alumni,

As I begin my new role as chair of the Law Alumni Board, I find myself reflecting on my time at Colorado Law and my experiences as an alumna. My experience with Colorado Law is defined by the relationships I built with classmates, faculty, and staff and the opportunities that Colorado Law afforded me.

Without a doubt, the best part of law school for me was the friendships and relationships I built in my three years in Boulder. Since graduating, I have been welcomed and supported by the larger alumni community. I feel genuinely lucky to have attended Colorado Law because of the people I have met as a result.

The opportunities Colorado Law provided me while in school and since graduating have been life changing. As part of the state's flagship university, Colorado Law is engrained in communities and organizations across the state. Like many students, I was fortunate to receive scholarship assistance. The financial support of the law school allowed me and many of my peers to seek out volunteer opportunities that taught us more than a classroom alone ever could.

I am heartened to see that Colorado Law's commitment to ensuring that all students have access to opportunities continues to expand. Those who attended the Law Alumni Banquet heard from two law students, Jemil Kassahun '24 and Larrisa Alire '23, recipients of the Leaders in Law and Community (LILAC) Fellowship. Jemil and Larrisa wowed us with their dedication to making the law school better, their commitment to service in their communities, and their passion for their legal educations. They also acknowledged that without LILAC and the scholarship it provides, they would not have been able to attend Colorado Law. Our community is better and stronger because of students like Jemil and Larrisa and programs like the LILAC Fellowship.

Meeting students and observing the remarkable work being done across the law school underscores the importance of Colorado Law's unwavering commitment to building and supporting a talented, diverse, and engaged student body, faculty, and staff, and creating an environment where all members of the law school community can thrive. The Law Alumni Board continues to support the law school in these efforts and to expand opportunities for alumni to engage with the law school and law students.

As we begin the new school year, I invite you to begin, continue, or expand your support of Colorado Law. Donations to LILAC, the Dean's Fund, scholarships, and/or clinics; engaging with the law school through mentoring, mock interviews, extracurricular competitions; and promoting the law school in our communities and networks all help to ensure that the next generation of students have access to the same (or better) opportunities that made our law school experiences so impactful. The members of the Law Alumni Board and I hope to engage with our alumni community throughout the coming year. Mark your calendars for Homecoming (Nov. 2-4, 2023) and the Alumni Awards Banquet (March 14, 2024) for opportunities to gather and celebrate Colorado Law and our community.

Sincerely,

Law Alumni Board

The members of the Law Alumni Board act as representatives of Colorado Law alumni and promote the best interests of the law school by stimulating interest in, building loyalty for, and increasing support for the law school in the community and among its alumni and students. The 2022–23 board chair is Caitlin McHugh, and the chair-elect is Tim Galluzzi.

As part of its service project, COBALT 22 raised over $18,000 for Mujeres de Colores, a nonprofit organization in Ft. Collins whose mission is to elevate women and children through education and leadership. The money raised benefited its backpack program which provides school supplies to kids in the Tres Colonias neighborhood.

In Memoriam: Hon. Kristy Martinez

Judge Kristy Martinez, who served as the first full-time director of Colorado Law's Korey Wise Innocence Project, died on Feb. 21, 2023, from cancer.

Martinez joined Colorado Law in 2015 as director of the Korey Wise Innocence Project and taught Post-Conviction Criminal Procedure and Wrongful Conviction. She was instrumental in growing the program, building and leading a team of student volunteers to screen requests and correspond with incarcerated persons seeking exoneration and their families. In 2019 she was appointed by then-Gov. John Hickenlooper to the Boulder County Court, where she presided over cases with a deep sense of compassion and respect for all who appeared before her. She fought tirelessly for the rights of the wrongfully convicted and was an extraordinary teacher and mentor to the many students she impacted. In 2019 Martinez received the honorary Order of the Coif from Colorado Law for her outstanding contributions to the legal profession.

IN MEMORIAM

In Memoriam: Charles Wilkinson

A Trailblazer for Justice, the Earth, and American Indian Law

Charles Wilkinson, Moses Lasky Professor of Law Emeritus and Distinguished Professor, died on June 6, 2023.

After graduating from Stanford Law School and practicing with prestigious firms in Phoenix and San Francisco, Wilkinson embarked on a remarkable career that encompassed teaching, writing, and advocating for the rights of Indigenous peoples and the environment. In 1971 he joined the newly formed Native American Rights Fund (NARF) in Boulder as a staff attorney, helping to shape the organization's pathbreaking advocacy for tribes. Together with the late Dean David Getches, Professor Richard Collins, and current NARF Executive Director John Echohawk, Wilkinson helped to secure landmark victories in tribal treaty rights litigation and establish a relationship between Colorado Law and NARF that endures to this day.

Wilkinson was a passionate and inventive teacher and mentor, educating and inspiring thousands of students and scores of colleagues at law schools throughout the country. As his colleagues and students would attest, Wilkinson left an indelible mark, not just on legal education and scholarship but on those attributes that are the very essence of the American West.

Most of Wilkinson's teaching career was spent at the Oregon and Colorado law schools, where his influence and impact were deeply felt. In 1997 the regents of the University of Colorado recognized Wilkinson as a Distinguished Professor, one of only 25 at the university. His gift for teaching and deep commitment to research were repeatedly acknowledged through numerous teaching and research awards throughout his illustrious career. Wilkinson was famous for hiring law students as research assistants and sending them out into the world to learn about legal problems. These opportunities were often life-changing, with dozens of his students going on to practice Indian law and public land law over the decades.

A prolific writer, Wilkinson authored 14 books, which stand as seminal works that shaped the fields of Indian law and federal public land law. These include highly regarded casebooks and general audience books, including Crossing the Next Meridian, which tackled pressing issues related to land, water, “Charles Wilkinson was fully present in everything he did. His passion for advocacy was admired widely and revered by those whose voices he elevated. He was a creative and enthusiastic educator whose style infected his students with a fervor for the American West. He was a prolific and creative scholar and author who put difficult and novel ideas into words that enabled others to grasp concepts that had not been previously enunciated. Farewell, Charles. Thank you for sharing your zeal for life. Thank you for the difference you have made in so many lives. May those of us touched by him carry on his legacy of curiosity, warmth, and excellence.”

the West, Indigenous rights, and the complex histories that shape our nation. His writings, marked by their clarity and profound insights, resonated with scholars, practitioners, and the public, making him an influential voice in legal and environmental discourse. He was an early thought leader in the field of environmental justice, seeing early on that the rights of Native Americans had to be considered at the heart of public lands and conservation policy.

Beyond the classroom, the written word, his work with tribes, and support for students, Wilkinson devoted himself to numerous special assignments for the U.S. Departments of Interior, Agriculture, and Justice. His expertise was sought after, and he played instrumental roles in critical negotiations and policy development. From facilitating agreements between the Timbisha Shoshone Tribe and the National Park Service to serving as a special advisor for the creation of Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument and Bears Ears National Monument, Wilkinson's successes extended far beyond the confines of academia.

Wilkinson's exceptional achievements were recognized through a multitude of prestigious awards and honors. These accolades include the National Wildlife Federation's National Conservation Award, which acknowledged his unwavering commitment to the preservation of our natural heritage. The Earle A. Chiles Award from the Oregon High Desert Museum celebrated his career-long dedication to the High Desert region, while the Twanat Award from the Warm Springs Museum recognized his tireless work in support of Indian people.

Wilkinson's visionary leadership and dedication to the Colorado Plateau were honored with the John Wesley Powell Award from the Grand Canyon Trust. Additionally, the Federal Bar Association bestowed upon him the Lawrence R. Baca Award for Lifetime Achievement in Indian Law, recognizing his profound contributions to the field. In 2021 the Colorado Center for the Book and Colorado Humanities honored Wilkinson with the Colorado Book Awards Lifetime Achievement Award for his contributions to the literary, history, and legal communities in Colorado and nationwide.

Wilkinson's legacy will continue to inspire generations to come, as those who knew him directly and those who were touched through his work strive to emulate his vision, passion, and commitment to creating a more just and sustainable world.

Kevin Cheney '14

Hometown: Casper, Wyoming

Professional title: Managing Partner,
Cheney Galluzzi & Howard, LLC

Community involvement: Colorado Bar Association Budget Committee, Colorado Bar Association Young Lawyers Division Executive Committee and CLE Subcommittee Chair, Colorado Trial Lawyers Association Executive Committee, Board of Governors, and Legislative Committee

Lives in: Denver, Colorado

LAST WORD

What is your favorite part about your job at Cheney Galluzzi & Howard?

There are many awesome parts of my job. I would say the two best parts are who I get to represent and who I get to represent them with. Our firm does exclusively plaintiff-side personal injury law. I get to represent real humans who have been injured through no fault of their own against giant corporations and insurance companies. It's David versus Goliath, and I wouldn't have it any other way. My other favorite part of my job is getting to work every day with my best friend, Tim Galluzzi '14, and the awesome team of staff and lawyers we have built together. I am literally living my dream, and I am so grateful for that.

What do you know now that you wish you had known in law school?

The importance of networking and relationships. To me, learning how to network and beginning to build professional relationships is every bit as important as the grades you get in law school. For everyone, besides those going into big law, networking may be even more important. I networked some while in law school, but if I had to do it again, I would be much more intentional about it. Whether you own your own firm, are trying to get a job, or are trying to make partner one day, who you know and how those people view you is incredibly important. Law students should focus on networking and building relationships until it becomes second nature.

If you could do another job for just one day, what would it be?

Working as a public defender. I went to law school wanting to do public defense and got a small taste of that work, both through the Criminal Defense Clinic and through working as a public defender at the City of Boulder Municipal Court for two summers after law school. I am so proud of all of the people who do that work day in and day out. To me, that is the law at its very best!

Who was the biggest influence on your career?

There are numerous people who have influenced my career, but I have a special place in my memory for my professors at Colorado Law.

Gabby Stafford taught me how to write. Ann England taught me how to try a case in the courtroom. Andrew Schwartz taught me you could have fun while learning about the law. Scott Moss believed in us when my partner and I wanted to start our own firm right after law school and almost nobody else did. But the two biggest influences were probably Ahmed White and Helen Norton. Ahmed White taught me that the idea that lawyers are neutral mercenary-style warriors fighting for their clients is a lie. We have a moral responsibility not just to fight for what the law is, but what it should be. Who we choose to represent matters. Helen Norton probably taught me the most important lesson of all, which is that I am not nearly as smart as I thought I was, and intellectual honesty takes hard work and reflection.

When I am not working, you can find me . . .

If I am not working, you can usually find me dancing to electronic music at Red Rocks or one of the many other awesome music venues in Colorado. Music is my passion, and I am so lucky that Colorado has so much of it! If I am not there, I am likely hanging out with my wife, Reena, and my giant Newfoundland, Pancake.

What is your favorite way to stay engaged with Colorado Law?

My partner is on the Colorado Law Alumni Board, so I stay pretty up to date with the happenings at the law school. But I would say my favorite way to stay engaged with Colorado Law is through judging mock trial competitions. Mock trial and moot court were such a major part of my law school experience, and it is wonderful to get to give back and help the next generation of trial lawyers sharpen their skills.
